

Microjustice’s ambition is to assure the legal inclusion of marginalised people and victims of humanitarian crises. We do so by enabling them to exercise their fundamental legal rights and facilitate their access to legal aid through our Legal Protection Program. Thus we aim to legally protect excluded groups that we have identified through 25 years of field work globally, such as: refugees, women, indigenous, migrants and poor people in general.

The world today is facing various humanitarian crises. At this very moment there are more refugees than ever while the catastrophic consequences of climate change drive new migration and increase poverty worldwide. All of them lack the knowledge and skills to access the legal-administrative system of their country and to exercise their rights.

Since 1996, Microjustice’s mission is to end this injustice and to promote universal access to legal protection and affordable legal aid in line with UN Sustainable Development Goal 16 ‘Leaving no- one behind’. We aim to provide every marginalised person with legal protection in all their day-to-day (legal) issues.

In various countries in three continents Microjustice has already successfully helped and connected the underprivileged with local legal professionals. Our 25 years of grassroots experience (read more in our CV) has resulted in two core tools: the Legal Protection Barometer and the online Legal Protection Platform.

Mission

It is our mission to enable people to be acquainted with and effectively exercise their rights and to connect marginalized people to local legal professionals with just one tap on their mobile phone.

How we work

Microjustice legal protection work is unique, for it has a definite preventive purpose. It gives legal protection to avoid or mitigate conflicts. As the protection aid tools focus on prevention and day-to-day justice, it is a much-needed complement to existing free legal aid programmes that typically focus on criminal law procedures and (sometimes) on conflict resolution procedures and courts.

Your support

More funding and resources are needed to roll out the Legal Protection Barometer and Platform globally. Although the Barometer and Platforms are best combined in an encompassing country-level strategy, both Barometer and Platform allow for tailor-made approaches to suit specific needs or types of conflict, including regional and global approaches.

Your help is sought to promote universal access to legal protection to the international development agenda with a global barometer fundamental in setting standards, and digital legal protection platforms to help people to feel secure and protected in their endeavours.

We ask you to support our efforts with funding, knowledge and if you are able, your network for:
